Once upon a time Emperor Akbar was having a walk with Birbal in the palace garden. It was a summer morning and many crows were playing round the pond. By looking at the crows, a question came in Akbar's mind and he asked Birbal that could he count and tell him how many crows are there in the kingdom. Birbal asked the emperor to give him one day for counting the crows. The next day Birbal came in the court and told the emperor that there were ninety five thousand four hundred and sixty-three crows. Akbar asked him if there were more crows than this number then he will hanged. Birbal cleverly told the emperor that if the crows were more it means that crows from the neighbouring village had come to met their relatives and if the crows were less then it means that crows from his kingdom have gone out to see their relatives. Birbal's answer supervised Akbar and once again, he became the king's favourite.

True Friends

Once there was a bee, it was very thirsty. So, it went to a stream to drink some water. Suddenly it fell into the water and was carried away by the ascent of water. There was a tree on the banks of the stream. A dove sitting on the tree was watching everything, it plucked a leaf and passed it to the bee. The bee came on the leaf and it was saved. After some time, a hunter came to the forest. It aimed at the dove. Suddenly the bee comes and stings the hunter. The hunter misses his aim and the dove flies away. In this way one friend helped the other in time of need.
